on the 6th of November, at St. Luke's Hospital, Chicago, died Beekman V. H. Uhihorn, of this city. An accident which befell him in October had on fined him there for several weeks. On the ist and on the 4th of November he wrote cheerful and hopeful letters home, speaking of his rapid recovery and of the probability of his soon being able to leave. On the 6th he considered himsel, and was pronounced, sufficiency strong to go, had paid his bill, and was in his room packing his trunk, when the report of a pistol alarmed the bouse. The chaplain, who was his kind and devoted friend, nurried with others in the direction of the sound, and on entering poor young Uhihorn's room he was found insensible, fallen forward from his chair. The room gave evidence of his having been occupied in packing, and at first it was supposed he had only is linted from the unusual exertion, possibly; but on laying him on the bed a small wound in the breast was discovered. Life was already gone. This most unhappy occurrence adds another to the long list of casualities from the unguarded use of firearms. Western and Southern travel perhaps excuses, and even sometimes renders necessary, the carrying of pistols; but such sacrifices as this make one doubt whether it would not be wiser to run the chances of an assassin's builet rather than the dangers of one's own. Probably in this case the pistol had been lying so long unused the poor fellow had forgotten it was long unused the poor fellow had forgotten it was long unused the poor fellow had forgotten it was long unused the poor fellow had forgotten it was long unused the poor fellow had forgotten it was long unused the poor fellow had forgotten it was long unused the poor fellow had forgotten it was long unused the poor fellow had forgotten it was long unused the poor fellow had forgotten it was long united by the going of one who was peculiarly dear and peculiarly capable of inspiring affection, its difficult to say what makes one person more universally beloved than others; but, whatever the
